

I do think that learning styles affect how people learn. When a person is more willing to acknowledge new information, they will learn quicker than they would otherwise. This is called a "growth mindset". While its opposite, the fixed mindset, could be good in certain scenarios, I feel like a growth mindset is ultimately more beneficial to learning. The ability to adapt to new information is key to learning anything, not just programming.